SELECT STORY.

A FRESH WILL.

OR, MR. PARCHMENT'S NEW CLIENT.

Mr. Parchment generally regarded a new client with a certain amount of distrust, being an old fashioned family solicitor of conservative notions, with a very respectable and wealthy connection. But John Downing came to him with an introduction from a reliable source, and at a glance Mr. Parchment was favorably impressed with him. He turned out to be an elderly gentleman, somewhat infirm, with an air of importance and quiet dignity, which the lawyer had learned from experience to associate with a good rent roll and a pedilection for the three per cents.

Mr. Downing commenced by apologizing for the lateness of the hour he had chosen for his visit, it being between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening. Observing that the old gentleman was muffled up to the eyes, and spoke in a hoarse whisper, as though he was suffering from some affection of the chest, Mr. Parchment remarked upon the impurdence of his venturing out after dark.

"If it does me any harm I shall have to bear the consequences," replied Mr. Downing very sharply. "The fact is nobody knows I have come out. At the present moment I am supposed to be confined to my room with bronchitis."

Mr. Parchment opened his eyes at this, but said nothing, while the old gentleman indulged in a quiet chuckle, which terminated in a fit of coughing.

"I—I asked our mutual friend, General Turnbull, to introduce me to a solicitor of eminence, on whose discretion and integrity I could rely," said Mr. Downing, when his cough ceased. "He gave me a letter to you, and I have taken the earliest opportunity of calling. I wish to make a fresh will, Mr. Parchment."

"So I anticipated," said the lawyer, who had guessed what was coming.

"I intend to dispose of my property in a manner that my relatives would not approve of," continued Mr. Downing, "and therefore I wish to have my will drawn by a gentleman of eminence and standing in the legal profession."

"A wise precaution" said Mr. Parchment dryly.

"I shall also ask you, as a matter of business, to act as one of my executors," said Mr. Downing. "It will then be your duty to uphold the will in case it should be disputed."

"I hardly think, sir, that my business engagements will permit me to accept the office," replied the lawyer, who did not relish the prospect of being made responsible for the vagaries of an eccentric testator.

"I said, as a matter of business. Of course I should not think of asking you to act for nothing," said Mr. Downing; "I will leave you 500 guineas for your trouble, and besides that there will probably be a good deal of profit attached to the winding up of my estate."

Mr. Parchment perceived from this speech that he had to deal with a shrewd, clear-headed man, and he therefore felt less hesitation about complying with his wishes. No doubt the legacy and the prospect of future business had their influence also, though the lawyer affected to be quite indifferent to these inducements. He reflected a few moments, and then said:

"Well, Mr. Downing, it will depend, of course, on the nature of the trusts."

"There will be no complication, for I propose to leave everything to one individual," replied Mr. Downing. "I mention that I am a bachelor, and my only near relation is a nephew, who has behaved badly to me, so I am determined to disinherit him."

"If, as you say, the matter is quite straightforward, I shall have no objection to act," said Mr. Parchment, taking up his pen and drawing up a sheet of paper towards him. "Will you give me the necessary instructions for your will?"

"I leave everything to Edward Alfred Husketh, and I appoint him executor with you," said Mr. Downing, readily.

"And who may Mr. Husketh be?" inquired the lawyer, as he wrote down the name.

"My man—valet, I suppose you ought to call him," answered the old gentleman.

"Dear me!" exclaimed Mr Parchment, leaning back in his chair. "And you leave him everything?"

"Yes."

"Absolutely?"

"Of course. You see your duties will be very simple."

"But have you considered, Mr. Downing? A man in his position—

"I know all that!" interrupted the old gentleman, testily; "that is what every one will say, and that is why I wish a lawyer of respectability like yourself to act as my executor, in order to protect his interests. You will find Husketh a very decent fellow, well educated and so on and quite gentleman enough to make better use of my money than my nephew could."

Mr. Parchment said no more, as it was quite clear that Mr. Downing had deliberately made up his mind. After all, the lawyer felt no interest in the disinherited heir, and he knew instinctively that his new client was not a person likely to be swayed by impulse or to take a serious thought without exercising his judgment. He therefore drew up the will according to instructions, not omitting the legacy to himself; and Mr. Downing called and executed it in due form the following evening, insisting upon paying the fees on the spot. The will was confided to Mr. Parchment's care, and the new client took his departure, apparently much relieved in his mind.

But the lawyer felt very uncomfortable when he reflected upon the matter. The idea of a client bequeathing his property to a servant, to the exclusion of his own relatives, was repugnant to Mr. Parchment's old-fashioned notions of justice and decorum, and his conscience smote him for not having protested more strongly against such a disposition. To ease his mind he resolved to call upon Mr. Downing and make an effort to induce him to modify his will in favor of the nephew; but this project was the outcome of several weeks' uneasy reflection, and, in accordance, with the legal propensity for procrastination, he put off his visit from day to day, until he was shocked and startled to hear of the death of the object of his solicitude.

Mr. Parchment was too practical to worry himself with vain regrets, and he therefore at once proceeded to discharge the duties imposed upon him by the will. He found the fortunate legatee a sleek, clean-shaven, quiet mannered, middle aged individual, answering very well to his late master's description of him. Mr. Husketh expressed mild surprise when the important news was communicated to him, but showed no emotion whatever. Though he treated Mr. Parchment with respectful deference, the lawyer could see that he intended to manage his own affairs, and not likely to develop into a tractable, confiding client. Perhaps it was owing to circumstances that Mr. Parchment conceived a strange aversion to his co-executor—so much so that he did not feel very loyally disposed toward him.

On the other hand he sympathized very much with the old man's nephew, Arthur Downing, who came up to town to attend his uncle's funeral. When Mr. Parchment informed him of the purport of the will, he bore his dissappointments so bravely, without a trace of anger or resentment, that the old lawyer's expression of condolence had a genuine ring in them. Arthur Downing explained that he had incurred his uncle's displeasure by marrying against the old man's wishes, and was therefore not surprised at his being disinherited.

At the same time his uncle had written to him a letter shortly before his death, in which he did not repeat his threat of altering his will, and Arthur Downing had come up to town in the full expectation that he was his uncle's heir.

Mr. Parchment was much struck by the magnanimity which the young man displayed toward Mr. Husketh. Far from attributing his rivals good fortune to chicanery or undue influence, he said that his uncle had always distrusted the man, and was not the least likely to have consulted him about the disposition of his property. He expressed his conviction that Husketh was a highly respectable person, and frankfly admitted that his long and faithful service entitled him to substantial benefits from his late master.

When the young man proceeded to say that he must now resign his commission and emigrate to the colonies to begin life afresh, Mr. Parchment felt that he would gladly forfeit his legacy if he could find a flaw in old Mr. Downing's unjust will. However, he knew very well that the document was perfectly valid on the face of it, and he, therefore, had to content himself with wringing Arthur Downing's hand sympathetically as they parted with mutual expressions of good will.

This interview, though it tended to increase the lawyer's antipathy to Mr. Husketh, served to satisfy him of the man's integrity, and he therefore took the necessary steps for proving the will without delay, leaving his co-executor to dispose of the testator's furniture and household effects. As old Mr. Downing, though a rich man, only occupied the upper part of a house in Harewood Square, his domestic affairs were easily arranged, and the lawyer was much impressed by the cool, businesslike manner in which the late valet set to work.

One evening, about a week after the funeral, Mr. Parchment was preparing to leave the office, at an unusually early hour for him, when Mr. Husketh was announced. The ex-valet appeared less placid and self-possessed than usual, and asked the lawyer to let him have a loan of £200 for a few days, until the probate of the will could be obtained. Though surprised at the request, Mr. Parchment asked no questions, but at once wrote a check for the amount. Husketh was anxious to receive the money in cash, but as the lawyer could not accommodate him and the banks were closed, he had to be content with an open check. Having handed over the draft, Mr. Parchment directed his confidential clerk to prepare a formal receipt for Mr. Husketh's signature, and hurried off to keep an appointment.

Next morning, when he reached the office, his clerk, an intelligent young fellow, who had a desk in the corner of Mr. Parchment's room, closed the door behind him with an air of mystery, and said:

"If you please, sir, I ventured to stop that check you gave Mr. Husketh last night."

"What?" exclaimed Mr. Parchment, quite aghast. "How dare you do such a thing without asking me?"

"When old Mr. Downing signed his will, sir," said the clerk, hurriedly, "I was one of the attesting witnesses, and I noticed that he had a singular scar on the back of his hand."

"Well, and what if he had?" exclaimed the lawyer, irritably.

"It is a singular coincidence that Mr. Husketh has a precisely similar mark on the back of his hand—a scar like a burn just below the wrist. I noticed it when he signed the receipt yesterday," said the clerk, impressively.

Before Mr. Parchment had time to comment on this communication, another clerk entered the room, followed by a young woman, who did not wait to be announced but pushed herself in front of him, and confronted the astonished lawyer with flaming eyes. In her hand she held a slip of paper, which he recognized as one of his own checks, and the circumstance helped him to indentify the young woman as the servant maid who had opened the door to him when he called at Harewood square to announce to Husketh his good fortune.

"What is the meaning of this?" she cried, holding out the slip of paper with trembling fingers.

"I am sorry," said Mr. Parchment, perceiving that it was the check he had given to Husketh. "There has been a misunderstanding, I'm afraid. Pray be seated."

"Misunderstanding! Yes, I should think so!" exclaimed the young woman, speaking in a shrill and excited voice. "He told me I had only to go to the bank, and I should get 200 sovereigns for that, instead of which I am treated like a pickpocket and sent over here. I knew it was only a trick of his. He wanted me to go without money, but I knew him too well; so, then, he gives me this to quiet me."

"Where did he want you to go?" inquired Mr. Parchment, pricking up his ears.

"To Holland first, and then to join me in a week or two, as soon as he'd got the money," replied the young woman, who seemed carried away by furious indignation; "but after being treated like this, he won't get me out of the country—not he! I can see his game; he wants to get me out of the way because I knew too much—the mean-spirited, sly faced scoundrel.

"If you tell me what you know it will be to your advantage," said Mr. Parchment, with sudden interest.

"I don't know what he has been up to, if you mean that," replied the woman, viciously; "I only wish I did. But you ask him why he come creepin' in one evening dressed in master's clothes, and so disguised that I thought it was the master himself for the minute, though I knew poor Mr. Downing was lying upstairs too ill to move hand or foot."

"Bless my soul!" exclaimed Mr. Parchment, nearly jumping out of his chair. "Can you—ahem!—are you aware whether the late Mr. Downing had a scar on the back of his right hand, like Mr. Husketh has?"

"I'll swear he had not, for I nursed him through his late illness," said the woman promptly.

Mr. Parchment drew a long breath and exchanged a significant glance with his clerk, who at once took a cab and drove to Scotland yard, while the lawyer despatched a brief telegram to Arthur Downing.

Something in the Bed.

Judge Pitman has a habit of slipping his watch under his pillow when he goes to bed. One night somehow it slipped down, and as the judge was restless it worked its way down toward the foot of the bed. After a bit, while he was lying awake, his foot touched it; it felt very cold; he was surprised, scared, and jumping from the bed he said:

"My gracious, Maria, there's a toad or something under the covers I touched it with my foot,"

Mrs. Pitman gave a loud scream and was on the floor in an instant.

"Now, don't go hollering and waking up the neighborhood," said the judge. "You get a broom or some thing, and we'll fix the thing, mighty quick."

Mrs. Pitman got the broom and gave it to the judge with the remark that she felt as though snakes were creeping up and down her legs and back.

"Oh, nonsense, Maria! Now, turn down the covers slowly while I hold the broom and bang it. Put a bucket of water alongside of the bed so that we can shove it in and drown it."

Mrs. Pitman fixed the bucket and gently removed the covers. The judge held the broom uplifted, and as the black ribbon of the silver watch was revealed, he cracked away at it three or four times with the broom, then he pushed the thing off into the bucket. Then they took the light to investigate the matter. When the judge saw what it was, he said:

"I might have known; its just like you women to go screeching and fussing about nothing. It's utterly ruined."

"It was you that made the fuss, not me," said Mrs. Pitman.

"You needn't try to put the blame on me."

Then the judge turned in and growled at Maria until he fell asleep.—Farmer and Manufacturer.

A Year of Crime.

MURDERS, EXECUTIONS, LYNCHINGS AND SUICIDES.

AN APPALLING LIST—MOB LAW IN THE SOUTH AND WEST—STATISTICS OF THOSE WHO SUFFERED DEATH BY THEIR OWN HANDS OR AT THE HANDS OF THE LAW.

During the past year, says the New York Evening Telegram, crime has held high carnival in the United States. On an average there have been each day two murders and one suicide. On the other hand executions have averaged only two in a week and lynchings one. Since January 1, 720 persons have met their deaths at the hands of their fellow-men. One hundred and twenty-five were mysterious murders. There were fifty-two wife murders, five murders of husbands, six parricides, four matricides, five fratricides and two sororicides. Forty children were killed by their parents. In twenty-three of the crimes there were two assassins, in three instances there were three of them. Twenty-four of the murderers committed suicide and one died in jail.

MURDERS.

In regard to murders New York leads with 131; 76 of these were committed in this city and 14 in Brooklyn. EXECUTIONS.

One hundred and one persons paid the penalty of their crimes by death during the past year. Of this number ninety-eight died on the gallows and three were shot, the scene of the executions of the latter being the Indian territory. Of those who forfeited their lives fifty-two were negroes, thirty-eight were white, eight were Indians and two were Chinamen. Three women were executed. One was hanged in Georgia, with four men, for having committed a murder at a camp meeting, another was executed in South Carolina, with her brother-in-law, for murdering her sister, and the third died on the gallows with two men in North Carolina for killing her husband. Eighty-eight of the executions were for murder, five for arson, three for treason, two for lying in wait and stabbing and three for assaulting women. The persons hanged for treason were three Indian scouts, executed by the United States authorities at Fort Grant, Arizona. Two brothers were hanged together in Tennessee, and two cousins died on the same gallows in Pennsylvania. Of the murders expiated, six were those of wives, one that of a husband, one of a son, one of a sister, one of an aunt, one of a daughter-in-law and one was committed in prison. One of the executions was that of Guiteau, for the assassination of President Garfield; one that of the Indian chief, Brave Bear, and two occurred in New York, those of Sindram and Leighton, on April 20 and May 19, respectively. The 101 executions are divided among the several States and Territories as follows: Georgia, 11; South Carolina, 9; Louisiana, 7; Missouri and North Carolina, 6 each; Dakota, Illinois, Indian Territory and Pennsylvania, 5 each; Kentucky, New York, Tennessee and Texas, 4 each; Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, Mississippi and Virginia, 3 each; Alabama, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Idaho, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico and Oregon, 1 each.

LYNCHINGS.

Judge Lynch, during the past twelve months, has been very busy. By his orders fifty-seven persons were put to death in punishment for various crimes. There were twelve double and four triple lynchings. Thirty-four of those on whom summary justice was inflicted were white men, twenty-two were negroes and one an Indian, who was hanged in California. Of the fifty-seven lynchings, thirty-four were for murder, three for horse stealing in Missouri, two for cattle stealing in Colorado, two for cotton stealing in Texas, two for robbery and attempted murder in Louisiana, two for murder and stage robbery and twelve for other crimes which the residents of the South and West generally punish with death. The hangings by mobs and vigilance committees occurred in the following States and Territories: Colorado, 6; Alabama, 5; Kentucky, Louisiana, New Mexico and South Carolina, 1 each; Kansas, Missouri and Washington Territories, 3 each; Arizona, Florida, Indiana, Minnesota, Mississippi, Ohio and Texas, 2 each; Arkansas, California, Louisiana, Missouri, Oregon, Virginia and Wisconsin, 1 each.

SUICIDES.

Three hundred and eighty-three persons in various parts of the country, having grown tired of life, ushered themselves into eternity by means of the pistol, gun, knife, razor, fire, the rope and various other ways. In New York 123 persons committed suicide, and in Brooklyn there were 26 cases. Of all the States and territories New York ranks first, with 184 cases; Jersey, 38; Pennsylvania, 27; Ohio, 24; Maryland, 13; Missouri, 10; Illinois, 9; California, 7; Arkansas and Delaware, 1' each; Connecticut, Massachusetts, North Caroiina, 5 each; Alabama, Indiana, Georgia, Maine, Rhode Island and Virginia, 4 each; District of Columbia, Louisiana, Mississippi and New Hampshire, 3 each: Kentucky, Michigan, Vermont and Wisconsin, 2 each.

A Diamond Dealer's Crime.

THE LAST FAMOUS MURDER SENSATION IN THE RUE RICHELIEU, PARIS.

Since 1871 a Polish Jew, named Rapoport, had been residing in a suite of apartments at No. 99 Rue Richelieu with his eighteen-year old daughter Adele, where he carried on the business of a diamond merchant. He had been judicially separated from his wife for the past five years, and the guardianship of his daughter had been decreed to him. Rapoport had engaged the services of a governess, who was the only one to throw any light upon the motive of the crime which has just shocked Paris. From the evidence of this woman there seems to have existed inexplicable dissensions between father and daughter. Rapoport often became enraged at his child, and toward the last his temper had become more harsh and dangerous. A few days ago while at breakfast, becoming angry at his daughter he went to his room and seized her so roughly that she screamed for help. The governess followed to find out the cause of the noise, and the ruffian released his daughter, who immediately went to her room in tears, and refused to put in an appearance during the remainder of the day. The governess attempted to reconcile them in the course of the day, but when she spoke to Rapoport he answered: "let her beg my pardon." The peacemaker reported this speech to Adele, who finally refused to make that concession as she was not to blame.

Rapoport's face the next day bore the marks of a sleepless night and his haggard face and wild eyes frightened the governess, who again attempted to bring about a reconciliation. Rapoport discharged her, and the governess went to her room that night with horrible presentiments which, unfortunately, were too soon realized. About 8 o'clock in the morning of the 12th inst., cries of "Help!" "Murder!" were heard coming from Adele's room. The cries were uttered by the young girl herself, who, scantily dressed, was seen trying to escape from the window of her room, which overlooked Rue Richelieu. An invisible hand rudely drew her within and the report of a pistol was heard. Those who had seen the poor girl hastened to her room, but the door was found to be locked. They at once sent for a locksmith, who arrived with the commissary of police. As soon as the door was opened, poor little Adele was found lying across the bed, with her feet on the floor. The furniture and the walls gave evidence of the terrible struggle made by the poor victim to save her life. Her heart was pierced by a dagger, which was found at the foot of the bed. A doctor was called in, but his services were useless, as she was then dead. After replacing her body upon the bed, search was made for the father, whose absence at this time seemed strange. They entered the adjoining room that the diamond merchant used for a counting room, where they found him also dead, a revolver lying by his side having ended the awful tragedy.

On the mantlepiece they found the dagger sheath corresponding with the fatal weapon which had ended the young girl's life, beside several letters, among which was one to the Jewish people, asking for burial in consecrated ground, and another to the commissary of police, which was addressed to "Justice, the press and to my friends," and containing these few laconic words: "the ingratitude of my daughter has been the cause of my suicide." Rapoport did not speak of the crime, yet that atrocious project must have been premeditated. Young Adele had been on very friendly terms with a friend of her father's, a Spaniard who had just furnished a rich suite of rooms for herself and father in the Chaussee d'Anten, where they were to go to reside a few days afterward.

Rapoport had been very successful in business, but his rapacious and usurious nature had earned for him a very deplorable reputation. His customers were recruited principally from the different play houses on the boulevard where he was frequently seen. Rapoport was a gamester, but as it was rumored that his manner of winning was far from fair, he had been blackballed from many clubs. The reason of his separation from his wife cannot be explained. She is a remarkably handsome woman and a relative of Johann Strauss, the composer, and when separated from her husband the decision of the court upon the guardianship of the girl was severely criticized by those who knew the family. Rapoport had given the poor girl a most dreadful education. He had got her in the habit of coming to fetch him each night at his club at a late hour, and would take her into night restaurants where the most terrible depravity stared her in the face. Those who have been at the Casino d'Enghien cannot have failed to see this strange couple of father and daughter, surrounded by the worst of people. The result of this teaching can be readily foreseen, and it is none the less certain that the diamond merchant was aware of it and accepted the responsibility. She at last became infatuated with the Spaniard already mentioned and Rapoport knew of it, since he was to reside with his daughter in the Spaniard's home, therefore the theory of paternal indignation cannot be allowed. Nor can madness be advanced, as the diamond merchant took no step without due deliberation. The motive of his crime cannot, therefore, be understood and the only person who can solve the mystery is the wife of the assassin.

Circumstantial Evidence in Italy.

A REMARKABLE STORY OF COINCIDENCES BY THE POET BROWNING.

By Robert Browning in the Whitehall Review.

Mr. Browning came back from Italy in the autumn with a curious story of coincidences. The story is divided dramatically into two parts, whereof the first was enacted late in the summer of last year, when Mr. Browning found himself with his sister in a remote Swiss valley on the confines of Italy. Strolling about in the evening while dinner was preparing, they paused before going in, to admire the calm and repose of the valley that lay stretched before them, when their talk suddenly turned to the subject of murder, and each began to speculate on what their conduct would be if they should be so unfortunate as to find a body. I say unfortunate, for it is well known that in France, Switzerland and Italy the presumption of innocence is most strongly against the person lighting on a corpse, instead of, as in our law, the presumption being in his favor. They could hardly settle as to whether they should or should not give information to the authorities and so escape the annoyance of being detained on their journey, when they found themselves at their inn door and dinner ready. The next morning, as they were about to resume their journey, the landlord attended with a long face to inform the poet that it would be impossible to have the two horses for his carriage, as one was wanted to bring in the body of a man found murdered early that morning at the head of the valley. Questioning him, Mr. Browning found that in all likelihood the murder had been committed after the conversation of the evening before, and that the body had been found by a man digging potatoes just about the spot where his sister and he had stood discussing the probabilities of their conduct in case such an event should occur.

Part one ends on the departure of the travelers behind the one horse; part two opens in the autumn of the year, when Mr. Browning paid another visit to the remote Swiss valley, again in company with his sister. Remembering the incident of last year, they asked the landlord if the murderer had ever been discovered, when he told them no; that the man suspected (who had found the body) had thrown himself out of his prison window, unable to bear the thought of a trial and the possibility of his wife and children in want, and had since died; and that it was supposed the murdered man, an Italian, had been stabbed in a quarrel by his companions, who had escaped over the frontier. Further, as on the previous year, dinner preparing, he took them to the spot where the body was discovered, and they found themselves standing exactly where, on the very evening of the crime, they had speculated as to what they should do in case of such an event. To heighten the dramatic effect of the coincidence, they learned that no crime of violence had been committed in the valley for the last hundred years. A gentleman present when this story was told capped it with one of a yet more curious chain of coincidences. He was traveling to Doncaster on business, and, turning to the first sheet of the Times, was amused to see, immediately below the announcement of his wife's giving birth to a son, the announcement that the wife of a similarly named husband had performed the same kindly office on the same date. At Doncaster, in the office where his business called him, he was introduced to his namesake, who, traveling down in the same carriage, had been equally amused. Nor did the coincidence end here, for, attending the race-course later in the day, some one in the betting ring put his hand on his shoulder, and naming him, roughly said, "You owe me £20!" Turning angrily, the man dropped his hand at once and apologized profusely, declaring he had for the moment mistaken him for a friend.

Mark Twain failed to answer a letter written to him by Serjeant Ballantine. After waiting a reasonable time the latter was so exasperated at not receiving an answer that he mailed Twain a sheet of paper and a postage stamp as a gentle reminder. Mr. Clemens wrote back on a postal: "Paper and stamp received; please send an envelope."

THE COLUMBIAN.

G. E. Elwell,
J. K. Bittenbender., } Editors.

BLOOMSBURG, PA.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 12, 1883.

The funeral of M. Gambetta took place in Paris last Saturday, and was a very imposing affair.

Col. Polk, the State Treasurer of Tennessee, has absconded, and the State is short a half milllion of dollars.

The Civil service reform bill has passed both houses of congress. If the politicians do not conjure up some method of avoiding its provisions, it will prove an important and beneficial measure.

The Philadelphia politicians ought to be able to keep the wolf from the door during the coming year. They do not seem to be faring at all badly at Harrisburg. After the third Tuesday of January Philadelphia will have the Governor, the Attorney General, the Governor's Private Secretary, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, the Secretary of Internal Affairs till next May, the Major General commanding the militia, and possibly the Adjutant General. For a county that doesn't give a Democratic majority once in half a century this isn't bad.—Pottsville Chronicle.

The Democratic State Committee will meet next Monday at Harrisburg. It will choose an executive committee of seven, either inside or outside of the membership of the general committee to conduct the next campaign. It will also elect a permanent Secretary who will be paid a salary and have an office at Harrisburg. The Committee will name the time and place for holding the next State Convention which will nominate a candidate for State Treasurer and Auditor General. In that Convention the Democracy of each county will, under the new rules, be represented by one delegate for each one thousand votes cast for Pattison and one for the surplus if it amounts to over five hundred votes. This gives Columbia county four delegates, as 4139 were cast here for Pattison. The whole number of delegates in the convention will be 356.

The Adjutant Generalship.

Governor Pattison has tendered to Colonel Guthrie the office of Adjutant General of the State and the tender has been accepted. It is understood that this appointment was made without solicitation upon the part of the gentleman thus complimented and he will enter upon his duties with the incoming administration absolutely free from any alliances of an entangling nature.

Colonel Guthrie served in the Union army during the whole length of the war and distinguished himself and won rapid promotion by personal courage and meritorious service. He identified himself with the National Guard at an early period of its development by enlisting as a private. He has been advanced by regular gradations until the attainment of his present position as colonel of the Eighteenth Regiment.

Inauguration of Gov. Pattison.

Governor-elect Pattison is announced to arrive in Harrisburg on Monday next the 15th inst., and will stay temporarily at Bolton's hotel. He will not take up his residence at the executive mansion until after he is sworn in Governor Hoyt will leave the mansion on Monday, and go to the Lochiel hotel, where he will remain until after the ceremonies attending the inauguration. The civic display promises to be very imposing, as most of the clubs and associations coming to the capital will be dressed uniformly and be accompanied by bands of music. From Philadelphia will come the Americus club, the Pattison club of the Twenty-ninth ward, the Metropolitan club of West Philadelphia and probably two or three other associations. The Americus club of Reading accompanied by the famed Ringgold band, the Americus club of Allentown, an association from York, one from Lancaster and one from Williamsport are announced to be there. Quarters have been engaged for most of the above named associations. The Central Democratic club of Harrisburg with the Altoona City band will act as escort to all visiting civic bodies. The indications are that the inaugural ceremonies will be the occasion of bringing such a throng of visitors as has not assembled at the state capital for many years.

Democratic Reform.

The newspaper reports of last week, to the effect that the caucus of the democratic members of the House had decided that there are not any useless employees of the House, were incorrect. The commitee on Wednesday morning made a report recommending the abolition of the following offices. Two assistant sergeant-at-arms, $800 each; one assistant doorkeeper, $600; two assistant messengers, $600 each; five pasters and folders, $600 each; nine pages at $200 each, making a total reduction of $8,200.

Should the report of the committee be adopted it will leave the officers of the House as follows: Chief clerk, $2,500; resident clerk, $2,000; reading clerk, $1,500; journal clerk, $1,500; message clerk, $1,000; transcribing clerk, $800; sergeant-at-arms, $800; two assistant sergeant-at-arms, $800; each; doorkeeper, $600: messenger, $600; assistant messenger, $600; doorkeeper rotunda, $600; postmaster, $800; assistant postmaster, $600; superintendent folding room, $600; five pasters and folders, $600 each; watchman, 1,095; two janitors basement, $600 each; two firemen, $600 each; two janitors committee rooms, $600 each; janitor wash room, $600; six pages, $2 per day. There will also be a reduction in the number of sweepers, the list made up by Chief Clerk Meek aggregating about forty less than the number employed under the late Chief Clerk Huhn.

Speaker Faunce, of the house of representatives, informed a reporter that he had not yet made up his committee. It is said the chairmanship of the committee on corporations will go to Major Walker, of Erie; ways and means to Zeigler, of Butler; judiciary general to M'Dowell Sharpe, of Franklin; judiciary local to Amerman, of Lackawanna; appropriation to Hasson, of Venango; municipal corporations to Furth, of Philadelphia; city passenger railway to Jamison, of Bucks, and railroads to Crawford, of Philadelphia.

Gov. Hoyt's Message.

The concluding portion of the Governor's message has been criticised in certain quarters becase he alludes to the present political situation in terms that do not suit the stalwart idea. We publish it that our readers may judge it for themselves. He says:

In Pennsylvania the people have determined upon a change. What does this decision mean? To this question three answers are proposed: one cynical and desperate, another pessimistic and hopeless, and a third patriotic and reassuring.

The first expresses the feeling and wishes of the professional politician. To him the change is only a turn in the fortunes of a game, whereby he has lost or won the stakes for which he played—the spoils of place and power. Accustomed to watch his luck and "hedge" as often as he can and dare, he is perplexed by one of two problems only: how to retrieve his losses, or how to spend his winnings. The prvalence of his view is not at all surprising. This class of statesmen despise the people whom they would cajole, and rely for their success, even more upon the apathy of the pure and intelligent, than upon the activity of the selfish and unscrupulous.

The second view regards the recent overturn as a mere caprice of mobile voters, a public spasm, a sentimental convulsion. It is based, wittingly or unwittingly, upon a latent distrust of the people; it imports a low view of American manhood, and a secret, but ill-disguised, disbelief in our capacity for self-government. If it be, indeed, well grounded, then there is little hope for the perpetuity of our institutions, and for that magnificent industrial and political development which is the staple of our noblest day-dreams.

But the third view is more hopeful and patriotic. According to it, this change marks the beginning of a new epoch in our political life. Those who cherish it, argue that thousands of our best citizens, relieved of the pressure of national anxieties, and unwilling to live forever in the past, are beginning to study the nature and details of State and municipal government as never before; are awaking to the business and scientific character of political problems, and have determined to thrust aside every individual, and every contrivance, that stands between them and the management of their own affairs. They will no longer be content with automatic activity in politics; they demand a conscious share in this noblest pursuit of intelligent men. The people have come to claim their own without the intervention of middlemen.

If this view be correct, then the occupation of the professional politician is gone. He belongs to a doomed species; he has outlived the only environment adapted to his nourishment, and must shortly pass away. That this is true, is indicated by our lineage, our traditions and the character of our recent progress. We are the descendants of men who defied kings and parliaments; we are the children of men who destroyed the congressional caucus, and created the national convention. Our citizens are meeting in their granges and trades unions, in their industrial leagues and commercial guilds, and are becoming keenly alive to every-day bearings of politics upon their own and their children's welfare. Even the primary meeting, once treated as utterly beyond the pale of the law, the sport of the juggler and the rogue, has become the subject of legislative enactment and protection. Nay more, even the promises of party platforms conform to the quickened senses of the people, and the necessity of other and better methods has received a certain grave and reverential recognition in party deliverances.

But Rome was not built in a day, nor can the political habits of a half century be transformed by a single decree, even though registered at the ballot-box. If, therefore, condemned political methods are to become permanently disreputable, the thoughtful citizens of this Commonwealth must be ever on the alert. ready at any moment to re-assert their strength, and to claim the fruits of their own victory.

Politicians are willing enough in the day of the people's power. But the leaders of a new epoch must be more than mere reflectors of current thought and feeling. They must be sagacious and intrepid, more ready to serve the people than themselves. Such leaders can live only in an atmosphere of intelligence and civic courage. The people then must be prompt and generous in the support of real merit; but at the same time they must make every public servant understand that he is a servant and not a master, and that each and all, the highest and lowest, whether paid the by year or paid by the day, must render faithful and unremitting service.

The people must tolerate no spurious economies, no counterfeit reforms, no mere partisan strategies, no judicial perversions, no legislative excesses, no administration in the interest of persons or classes, or even in the exclusive interest of parties. They must be quick to discern, swift to censure what is clearly wrong, and equally swift to praise what is clearly right. They must make the men in power feel that the eyes of thousands are upon them, and that the day of judgment is always going on. But above all, they must never suffer the conviction to take root that the recent changes were only freaks of circumstances—only spasms of an unstable public mind—only the caprices of irritated and transient feeling.

The Titans will never conquer the Gods if the Gods awake to the combat; the baser forces of society can never permanently overmaster the purer, if the purer will only add to their convictions, courage—if their will power once becomes as active as their intelligence. The enemies of good government will not be idle. Never so very numerous, they multiply themselves indefinitely by their unceasing diligence. Their baleful influence can only be counteracted by a vigilance' an energy, an ingenuity, in some proportion to their own.

For one, I have faith in the conscience, and in the growing intelligence of our Commonwealth, and in its ability to cope with and overcome the evils which have hitherto and may hereafter beset us. To despair of the virtue of the citizen is to despair of self-government, and to despair of self-government is to believe that the frame of human society is without a soul.

Ex-Governor Curtin has given notice through the local press that a competitive examination will be held at Bellefonte on the 17th of the present month to select a cadet to represent congressional district(the 14th) in the military academy at West Point.

The Western Union Telegraph.

Argument on the petition of citizens of Pennsylvania asking that the attorney general file a bill in equity with the supreme court against the Western Union Telegraph Company, for an alleged defiance and violation of the constitution and laws of the state, was heard before Attorney General Palmer last week, Friday. Silas W. Pettit, of Philadelphia, on behalf of the petitioners, opened the argument. He said that it was a well established law that a corporation in one state can only exercise its franchises in another by suffrage and invitation and not by any constitutional provision. "I take it that the attorney General of Pennsylvania will not decide that a telegraph company incorporated by the state of Texas or Maine can come into the cities of Pennsylvania and erect poles and string them with wires in utter disregard of the laws of the state. It has been said that the Western Union Telegraph Company is beneficial in the fact that it constructs public necessities. I say it does not construct, but lets other companies construct and, as soon as they reach competitive dimensions, buys them in utter violation of their powers.

He was followed by General Swayne of New York, who opened the argument in behalf of the company. He held that the circumstances out of which the case arose were of a natural character.. The small corporations referred to were no practical good to the people and unprofitable to their owners, and that the Western Union Telegraph Company was serving the public by buying their corporate rights and making them of value. He read several opinions, one the case of Williams vs. Western Union Telegraph Company, recently decided by the superior court of New York, in support of his argument. General Swayne claimed that the laws of the state afford no warrant or authority for the relief asked for in said information or of any part of it. The people of the state have been benefitted by the changes and consolidations, and are at present furnished with telegraphing at less cost than people of other parts of the country. He agreed that the lines of the company were so necessary to the vital importance of the people of the whole United States that to deprive the public of their use would be to paralyze business interests and cause serious injury. The right of coming into the state he claimed was granted them by congress through the inter-state commerce laws.

Benjamin Harris Brewster spoke very briefly for the company.

The argument of the case consumed the entire afternoon and at its conclusion Attorney General Palmer took the papers and reserved his decision.

A very important element in the great business of BAILEY, BANKS & BIDDLE, is what is usually designated by city houses the country trade—a term covering not only the patronage received from the rural districts, but also that from the cities outside of the few large centres.

B B B

BAILEY, BANKS & BIDDLE long ago arrived at a proper appreciation of the fact that in almost every locality in the vicinity of Philadelphia there are many persons of taste and refinement who, desiring the highest grade of useful and decorative articles in gold, silver-plated ware, precious stones and imported fancy goods, prefer to purchase of a house of character and reputation, in whose representations absolute reliance can be placed, and whose name, in connection with goods of any class, implies unimpeachable quality and the highest standard of dealing.

B B B

In accordance with this view, more than any other house of like character, BAILEY, BANKS & BIDDLE have taken care to place before the public outside of their own city accounts of all new importations and the varying attractions prepared for the several seasons.

B B B

This attention to out-of-town customers has been bountifully rewarded, and their favor thus earned has contributed much to the brilliant success of the season just closed.

B B B

A similar policy will be pursued for 1883. The best taste and judgment will be used in selecting goods for those ordering by mail, and a satisfactory assortment will be sent on approval whenever requested by anyone known to the house or furnishing reference.

Somebody in Pine township has a prejudice against bachelors. The Williamsport Sun and Banner contains the following:

A correspondent from Columbia county says that Pine township has too many old bachelors, and desires the Sun and Banner to go for them heavy. Oh, no, we can not do it. We have a sincere pity for old bachelors, and if we could do anything to change their course of life, we should most cheerfully do so, but as for giving them a racket, oh, no. They are, as a rule, a good, jolly set of fellows, and, when they do get married, make capital husbands. If the girls of Pine township want a partner for life, they'll set their caps for these bachelors.

Bloomsburg vs D. J. Waller.

The bill of complaint of the plaintiff in this case sets forth that previous to September 1882, D. J. Waller had opened and dedicated to the public, the extension of West street below Fifth, and the same had been accepted by the Town and the public; that the Town had taken possession of, repaired and improved said street; that at the time of such dedication and acceptance, there was a runlet which from time immemorial had crossed West street at its intersection with Fifth, and thence through the adjoining land of D. J. Waller and others; that the said D. J. Waller and his employees, since the first day of October, 1882, have by an erection of earth, stones, plank, posts and gravel. at the intersection of said streets, obstructed and changed the course of said runlet from its natural bed, causing the water to overflow, and gather in a pool, causing noxious smells, and impeding travel, and the said D. J. Waller refused to remove the said obstruction, or to permit the Street Commissioner to remove the same, thereby maintaining a great dangerous and injurious public nuisance; that the defendant has commenced the erection of a stone foundation in the course of said runlet upon his lot of ground on the corner of Fifth and West streets, in such a manner as to permanently obstruct and prevent the natural and ancient flow of said stream, thereby causing the overflow, change of course, &c., and creating and maintaining a public nuisance; that after said West street from Fifth to the D. L. & W. R. R., had been dedicated, accepted, repaired, and used as a public highway, the defendant and his employees, opened a deep, dangerous and exposed ditch on the sidewalk of said West street between Fifth and Sixth streets, into which ditch the defendant, by means of the said obstruction and stone wall, changed and diverted the course of said stream from its natural course through the land of the defendant, and caused it to run in the said ditch along West street, thus obstructing and rendering impossible that portion of the street, and thus maintaining a public nuisance.

On the presentation of this bill a preliminary injunction was granted, and the hearing took place on Monday last, having been adjourned from Friday. After argument by counsil the following decree was made by the court, by argreement of both sides.

The Town of Bloomsburg } vs } In Equity.
David J. Waller. }

No. 1, February term, 1883.

And now, January 8, 1883, the parties appear and counsel for the defendant move to dissolve the preliminary injunction—after hearing the Court being of opinion that by reason of bars or a fence having been erected, kept up and maintained across West street at its intersection with Fifth street at the south side of the latter, by parties controlling the land alleged to have been dedicated as a street until November 30, 1882, by which the public had at all times before been precluded from using the said land as a highway, and no acceptance having, since its removal, been made or taken place by the constituted authorities of the Town of Bloomsburg, therefore the said West street as described in the bill has not become a public highway and the injunction ought not to be continued.

It is therefore ordered that the injunction be dissolved.

WILLIAM ELWELL,
President Judge.

This does not necessarily end the litigation. The plaintiff's bill is not withdrawn, and the defendant may still be required to answer or plead, and the plaintiff may demur or take issue. In the latter case the cause may be referred to a master and examiner before whom the testimony can be taken, when the parties can attend and cross-examine. The refusal to continue the injunction amounts to nothing in settling the rights of the defendant or the public. That can only be done on final hearing.

We have said this much to correct an impression that the questions at issue have been adjudicated.

Increased Postal Facilities.

Through the efforts of our congressman, Hon. R. Klotz, the mails will be carried daily from Orangeville to Rohrsburg, hereafter. This will prove a great convenience to the people of that section of the county, who feel grateful to Mr. Klotz for his efforts in their behalf.

Hagenbuch—McHenry.

Mr. Oscar D. Hagenbuch of Centre, and Miss Ella C. McHenry of Stillwater, were married January 4th, 1883.

The above was the great social event of the season, being the most brilliant affair of the kind that ever occurred in the neighborhood. The ceremony was performed in the Christian Chapel at half past six p. m., by the Rev. D. M. Kinter, in the presence of a very large audience which assembled to witness it. Messrs. Kinney Adams, of Berwick, and Irvin Yost, of Fishingcreek, officiated as groomsmen, and Misses Ida Hagenbuch, sister to the groom and Nettie McHenry, daughter of Hon. E. J. McHenry, as bridesmaids, Misses May, Jennie, Eva and Grace McHenry as flower girls, and Messrs. H. V. White of Bloomsburg, and O. D. McHenry of Stillwater, as ushers. Mr. Charley McHenry presided at the organ, and to say he did it well, is but what all who know Charlie's musical powers, would expect. Everything passed off perfectly smooth, and without a single mistake or jar to ruffle the pleasure of the occasion at the chapel. After the ceremony the wedding party together with the numerous invited guests repaired to the home of the bride's father, Mr. J. F. McHenry, the popular merchant of Stillwater, where a great feast of good things awaited them, and to which all did ample justice. Next in order came the "old fashioned drumming" by the "boys," who did their work well, retiring quietly and orderly after the presentation of the "new married folks," and the usual "treat." Then followed the complimentary "serenade" by the Benton and Orangeville brass bands, who discoursed some sweet music in spite of the cold wind and driving snow which beat down upon them. They also took a view of the bride and groom, which seemed to thaw out their nearly frozen lips, and warm up their cold fingers for another merry tune, after which they were disposed of in some way unknown to the writer, which sent them home with smiling faces and warm hearts filled with good wishes for the happy couple. Taken all together it was a most pleasant affair, and to say that all enjoyed it is to put it very modestly. It was an event that will long be remembered. The bride was the recipient of numerous handsome and valuable presents.

Hon. E. A. Apgar then gave instructions in Geography: 1st, without text book, Geography by observation, points of the compass; 2nd, with text book, Geography by presentation, Geography by description. He then gave a most excellent recipe for a "Machine school-master," which is as follows: Get a photophone upon which the impressions of a perfect recitation have been taken, place this before the class, as long as the recitations coincide with these impressions no effect will be produced, but if a mistake is made, a rod will fall across the shoulders of the pupils.

An essay on Newspaper Geography was read by Miss Eva Rupert. Plan: A member of the class puts on the board the headline of dispatches; questions of persons, places and events follow. Benefit: It teaches the pupils to have opinions, to think and form conclusions of their own.

Primary Arithmetic by Prof. Sanford. Use objects in the outset, but not for purposes of drill, develope numbers above mine, by means of a ten bundle of sticks, twenty by two bundles etc., do not place columns of figures on the board, and allow them to remain there. To convince pupils appeal to fashion. Do not have an iron bedstead to which you fit the pupils, stretching out some and cutting off others, but have flexibility. Adjourned.

Resolved, 3rd. That our thanks are due the gentlemen and ladies who have acted as our instructors, for their able, clear and concise treatment and presentation of their respective branches, also that our thanks are due the Principal and teachers of the Catawissa schools for their kindness.

GERTRUDE LA SHELLE, } Ast. Secy's.
EDITH BARTON, }

In memoriam of Miss Amanda Breech, a member of the class of '76 of the Bloomsburg State Normal School, after a sickness of only a few days departed this life January, 27, 1882. Age, 22 years 3 months and 7 days.

Previous to her entering the Mt. Joy Orphan School little can be said, or while there we are unable to give any history of that period of her life. After finishing the required time at Mt. Joy, she was recommended to the Bloomsburg State Normal School, where she was admitted into the senior class, known afterward as the class of '76.

She was very studious. There was no such thing as fail in whatever she undertook. After graduating she entered the ranks as a teacher, and as such she met with perfect success, Her pupils whom she was compelled to leave before the close of the term, with her class-mates and friends, sorrow greatly on account of her sudden and unexpected death.

BY A MEMBER OF HER CLASS.

Julia Woolley, one of our teachers, died at her home in Lime Ridge, November 14, 1882.

When quite a little girl she gave her heart and life to the keeping of her Heavenly Father, joined the Methodist Episcopal church, and up to the time of her death was a living monument of Him she served so well.

In the Millville Academy she spent two or three terms as a student, after which she became a teacher in the Public Schools of Hazleton, where she remained three years. Since then, she has taught several terms in this county near her home, where she was loved not only by her pupils but by all that knew her.

Her death was sudden and very sad indeed. Having opened her school at the usual time and ended successfully the first week of school work, she was taken ill and after a few days died.

But, while we have lost one of our number, while the community in which she lived is bereft of a bright star, we will remember that she has but gone to receive her reward.

Centre Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Aikman gave a very pleasant dinner party Tuesday last on the return of their son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Aikman. Thirty of the relatives and particular friends of the family were present to welcome the newly married couple to a place in their midst. An elegant dinner was served and a very pleasant, social and friendly time was had. Mr. and Mrs Aikman will occupy the farm belonging to Mr. J. E. Aikman after the first of April next. Their many friends all join in wishing them future prosperity and happiness.

The Aikman dinner party makes another event of interest to the family, i e, the birth of the first grandchild, at Mr. A. C, Creasy's, they are all happy because "it's a boy.

On Saturday last Mr. J. S. Hagenbuch roasted "the big turkey," and invited his neighbors and friends to help eat it. A large party answered the call and a very pleasant time is reported. Sandy is a "hale fellow well met" and all who know him wish him continued prosperity and happiness. REPORTER.

Messrs. Editors:

I seldom appear publicly in print, but the facts connected with my experience which follows are so striking, and bear so closely upon the experience of others, that I venture to reproduce them entire.

In the month of September, 1879, I was practicing medicine in New Orleans. The summer had been excessively hot and everybody was complaining of being exhausted and feeling tired. It was not an unfrequent occurrence to have patients ask for something to relieve this weary sensation, and that I should also partake of the same universal lassitude or weakness, did not alarm me. I supposed that over work and exposure had produced a temporary physical prostration; therefore I made a trip to St. Paul, Minn., thinking that a rest of a few weeks in a cooler climate would soon reinvigorate me. Little did I dream, however, what was in store for me. After getting settled in my new quarters I took a short walk every day, and patiently awaited a return of strength, but in spite of all my efforts I seemed to be losing strength and even any slight exercise became laborious and troublesome. During this time I had frequent dull aching pains in my head, and through my back and hips, occasional shooting pains in various parts of the body, with soreness, shortness of breath, and palpitation of the heart. My feet and hands would be like ice one day, and burn with heat the next. I had no desire for food and what I did eat distressed me; my sleep became disturbed with the frequent desire to urinate. The quantity of fluid passed would at one time be quite profuse. Then for days I would be perfectly free from this desire and nothing seemed to be the matter; nevertheless my debility gradually increased. My eyelids were puffed out; my bowels were alternately torpid and too active, the urine would be clear some days, on others it would be of a high color and deposit a brick-dust sediment, and at still others there would be a whitish appearance and a thin greasy scum would rise to the top. The pains in my head, back, chest, joints, bowels and bones were horrible in the extreme. I went in vain from place to place and consulted the best medical authorities the country affords; I would have a chill one day and a burning fever the next. I suffered excruciatingly with a numbness of my feet and hands, and at the base of the brain and between my shoulders; at times my limbs and body would bloat and physicians said I was suffering from the dropsy and could not recover.

How I could be so blind to the terrible trouble that was devouring me, I do not know; but there are thousands to-day who are suffering from the same cause and are as ignorant of its nature as I was. My skin was the color of marble at one time, and then again it would be like saffron, and this terrible restlessness, and I might say wildness, was followed by a dull, heavy, drowsy sensation. I was wasted to a mere skeleton except when the dropsical bloat occurred. I tried all the celebrated mineral waters of this country and Europe; all kinds of medicine and all kinds of doctors. Still no help came. I lay at my hotel in Philadelphia, where I was temporarily sojourning, given up to die by friends and physicians alike, when there providentially came into my hands a little pamphlet, which I carefully read and from which I got a view of my real condition, which no other agency had revealed. Acting on its advice, I had my water analyzed at once, and to my surprise, albumen and tube casts were found in large quantities. A skillful physician was sent for and apprised of the fact. He said I had Bright's Disease, and that death was certain. My friends importuned me to take a remedy which had won a great reputation for the cure of all forms of kidney diseases, and I therefore lay aside my prejudice and commenced its use. At first my stomach rejected it and I had to use small quantities; but after the first five days my stomach retained full doses. This was one year ago last October, and my improvement was rapid and permament. I have regained 50 of the 65 pounds of flesh I lost during my illness, and I feel as well to-day as I ever did, and I can unreservedly state that my life was saved by Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy I used.

It may seem strange that I, being a physician and an ex army surgeon, did not have the water analyzed before: but such is the fact. I had the symptoms of every other disease, and I did not suspect that my kidneys were in the least particular out of order; and here is just where I was in the greatest danger, and where most people who read this article are in danger. I find that I am only one of thousands who are suffering from kidney disorders, which, neglected, surely terminate in Bright's disease. I also know that physicians may treat these disorders for months without knowing clearly what the trouble is, and even after ascertaining the cause be unable to prevent it. When death, however, finally overtakes the helpless victim they disguise its real cause, attributing it to heart disease, convulsions, apoplexy, vertigo, paralysis, spinal meningetis, blood and uremic poisoning, etc. etc.

Words, of course, fail to express my thanks to H. H. Warner & Co., of Rochester, N. Y., for giving the world such a needed and certain specific as the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, but such as they are I gladly give them; while to the thousands to whom I have lectured upon the laws of health and hygiene I commend this letter most cordially, and warn them to beware of the insidious nature of a disease over which in one form or another, is carrying more people to untimely graves than any other malady.

J. M. PORTER, M. D.

For the Hair.—One dram of carbolic acid, six drops of oil of lavender, and two and a-half ounces of olive oil formed the perscription which proved effectual in destroying a parasitic affection of the mustache of a gentleman who consulted Dr. George Thin, London, England. The hair had fallen out, and a sort of baldness occurred in spots, but after the application of the remedy the hair grew again as thick and healthy as before the parasites had attacked it.

HONORABLE MENTION.

Of all the remedies on earth that well may claim attention, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil commands especial mention. For wondrous power to cure disease, its fame there's none can throttle. Its merits are not in the puff, but are inside the bottle. Rheumatism, neuralgia, sore throat, asthma, bronchitis, diphtheria, etc., are all cured by Thomas' Eclectric Oil.

"Sometimes I wonder what a mean man thinks about when he goes to bed," says Burdette in the Hawkeye. "When he turns out the light and lies down. When the darkness closes in about him and he is alone, and compelled to be honest with himself. And not a bright thought, not a generous impulse, not a manly act, not a word of blessing, not a grateful look, comes to bless him again. Not a penny dropped into the outstretched palm of poverty, nor the balm of a loving word dropped into an aching heart; no sunbeam of encouragement cast upon a struggling life; no strong right hand of fellowship reached out to help some fallen man to his feet—when none of these things come to him as the "God bless you" of the departed day, how he must hate himself. How he must try roll away from himself and sleep on the other side of the bed. When the only victory he can think of is some mean victory in which he has wronged a neighbor. No wonder he always sneers when he tries to smile. How pure and fair and good all the rest of the world must look to him and how cheerless and dusty and dreary must his own path appear. Why, even one lone, isolated act of meanness is enough to scatter cracker crumbs in the bed of the average, ordinary man, and what must be the feelings of a man whose whole life is given up to mean acts? When there is so much suffering and headache and misery in the world anyhow, why should you add one pound of wickedness or sadness to the general burden? Don't be mean, my boy. Suffer injustice a thousand times rather than commit it once.

Use of the Hand Hoe.—With the introduction of the horse-cultivator the hand hoe went out of use on most Western farms. More work could be done with the cultivator, and it could be done with greater ease. The more the cultivator was improved the more farmers became attached to it, and the greater was their reluctance to handle the hoe. At present the implement that has been used longer and to better advantage than any other in the cultivation of crops is generally discarded on Western farms. Indeed, many market gardeners manage to raise most of their vegetables without using the hoe to any considerable extent. The horse-cultivator is certainly a very desirable implement to employ in both the field and the garden, but its use should be supplemented by that of the hand hoe. It is profitable to continue the use of the hoe in every garden and cultivated field. Work can be performed with it that can not be done with any implement drawn by a horse. The hoe should be used in every corn and potato field before the cultivator is put in operation. It should be employed to remove stones, turfs and pieces of hard earth that may be over the plants that are making their appearance above ground, and for stirring the soil around them. The cultivator is excellent for working the ground between hills, but for cultivating the hill itself there is no implement like hand hoe. It is very difficult to keep a field devoted to any cultivated crop entirely clean of grass and weeds without using the hoe. A field that has been worked at least once with a hand hoe is always more productive than one that has been tended with the cultivator alone. The truth is, the former performs some work which the latter cannot do.—Chicago Times.

Lime for Hen-Houses. — Through the summer months the hen-house should have had a thorough cleaning out once or twice. Before cold weather set in, if there are any doubts as to the cleanliness of the house, it should be gone over and done. In the first place, remove all the droppings from the house, and sweep the floor clean. Then sprinkle air-slacked lime and ashes thickly thereon. Wash all the perches (after all patches of manure have been scraped off) with boiling lime whitewash, put on with an old brush, and carefully worked and rubbed into the cracks, being careful to cover every part of the roost thoroughly. Lime is the greatest cleanser and purifier known. Any one at all acquainted with insects would not for a moment think of smoking them, but with brimstone. A thorough cleaning must be gone through with twice each year. After the floor is cleaned, the siding, nest-boxes, perches, and every appurtenance belonging to the inner building, must be thoroughly whitewashed before a riddance of the pests can be effected. They dread whitewash, and delight and revel in filth. Use strong, unleached wood ashes, if they can be had, and keep the floor dry and covered with them. If not, employ quick lime. If the droppings are dried up immediately, their living is gone.

Rice Waffles.—Rice waffles, which are simply delicious for breakfast, must be started the day before you wish to eat them; that is, the rice must be boiled. A good way to accomplish this is to make a rice pudding to-day and reserve half a cup full of the cooked rice for to-morrow's waffles. To this quantity add a pint of sweet milk, the yolks of three eggs, two ounces of butters (or a good sized lump) and a little salt. Mix half a teaspoonful of soda with one pint of flour, beat these all together and bake in waffle irons in hot oven

Sponge Cake.—One pint of sugar, one pint of flour, seven eggs—the whites and yolks beaten separately—one teaspoonful and a half of lemon extract; stir the flour in a little at a time, put the whites of the eggs in last, beating them thoroughly in. Bake in a long, narrow tin; line it with white paper, the sides as well as the bottom. You are then sure to have no trouble about taking it from the tin.

EFFECT OF NOT EATING.

About four months ago, Peter Lappan, a resident of London, Ontario, was shot through the centre of the body by a comrade who was carelessly handling a revolver. The doctors were of the opinion that the wounded man would die, as it was evident that the ball had passed through that part of the body where the stomach ought to be, and the chances were that a vital part had been pierced. But the man, contrary to all expectations, recovered, and now comes the explanation of the cause of his remarkable escape from death. It appears that prior to the shooting Lappan had fasted for thirty-six hours, and as a result the organs of digestion were shrunken and drawn out of their usual place and out of the course of the bullet. Had he eaten a breakfast that morning, or even supper on the night before, he was a dead man.

A FAVORITE FISH.

A Russian correspondent says that sterlet is the favorite fish in St. Petersburg. Frozen sterlet is cheap, but fresh sterlet is very dear. The fish is caught in the Volga, and, if intended to be sent alive to St. Petersburg during winter, it makes the journey in water artificially warmed. When the guests bidden to the feast arrive, the sterlet is shown to them swimming in water; then it is taken out, killed and cooked. So costly is it that it is estimated that a plate of sterlet soup is worth about one pound.

WIFE-SELLING.

The Brighton Herald of May 27, 1826, states that the Brighton Market Book recorded: "May 17, 1826, Mr. Hilton, of Lodsworth, publicly sold his wife for 30s., upon which the toll of 1s. was paid." The matter came to the knowledge of the magistrate, who sent for the toll collector to justify his strange conduct in charging toll; when he at once referred the bench to the market by-laws: "Any article not enumerated in the by-laws pays one shilling."—Notes and Queries.

To make us acquainted with ourselves, and others acquainted with us, there is no place like a bed of sickness.

This is especially true of a family medicine, and it is positive proof that the remedy imitated is of the highest value.

As soon as it had been tested and proved by the whole world that Hop Bitters was the purest, best and most valuable family medicine on earth, many imitations sprung up and began to steal the notices in which the press and people of the country had expressed the merits of H. B., and in every way trying to induce suffering invalids to use their stuff instead, expecting to make money on the credit and good name of H. B.

Many others started nostrums put up in similar style to H. B., with variously cunningly devised names in which the word "Hop" or "Hops" were used in a way to induce people to believe they were the same as Hop Bitters. All such pretended remedies or cures, no matter what their style or name is, and especially those with the word "Hop" or "Hops" in their name or in any way connected with them or their name, are imitations or counterfeits.

Beware of them. Touch none of them, but: Use nothing but genuine Hop Bitters, with a bunch or cluster of green Hops on the white label. Trust nothing else. Druggists and dealers are warned against dealing in imitations or counterfeits. (9)

NEUTRALIZED.

In what way a Prevalent Evil may be shorn of its Power to Harm.

Malaria is a broad name for many diseases—all originating in blood poisoning. Bilious fever, the typhus and typhoid fevers and chills and fever are prominent members of the family. Malaria defies alike the builders, the plumbers and the physicians. Despairing of ordinary treatment, the latter almost unanimously recommend BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER as the greatest anti-malarial specific of the age. These plasters act upon the liver, spleen, bowels and kidneys.

Worn over the region of the liver, and upon the back over the kidneys, they ward off malaria like an armor. No other plasters do this.

When you purchase, satisfy yourself that the word CAPCINE is cut in the centre of the plaster. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York. Highest awards at International Expositions.

PATENTS
CAN I OBTAIN A PATENT?

Send a rough sketch or (if you can) a model of your invention to GEORGE E. LEMON, Washington, D. C., and a Preliminary Examination will be made of all United States patents of the same class of inventions and you will be advised whether or not a patent can be obtained.

FOR THIS PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION NO CHARGE IS MADE.

What will a Patent Cost?

If you are advised that your invention is patentable, send $20 to pay Government application fee of $15, and $5 for the drawings required by the Government. This is payable when application is made, and is all of the expense unless a patent is allowed. When allowed, the attorney's fee ($25) and the final Government fee ($20) is payable. Thus you know beforehand, for nothing, whether you are going to get a patent or not, and no attorney's fee is charged unless you do get a Patent. An attorney whose fee depends on his success in obtaining a Patent will not advise you that your invention is patentable, unless it really is patentable, so far as his best judgment can aid in determining the question: hence, you can rely on the advice given after a preliminary examination is had. Design Patents and the Registration of Labels, Trade Marks and Re-issues secured. Caveats prepared and filed. Applications in revivor of Rejected, Abandoned, or Forfeited Cases made. Very often valuable inventions are saved in these classes of cases. If you have undertaken to secure your own patent and failed, a skillful handling of the case may lead to success. Send me a written request addressed to the Commissioner of Patents that he recognize GEORGE E. LEMON, of Washington, D. C., as your attorney in the case, giving the title of the invention and about the date of filing your application. An examination and report will cost you nothing. Searches made for title to inventions, in fact any information relating to Patents promptly furnished. Copies of Patents mailed at the regular Government rates, (25c. each.) Remember this office has been in successful operation since 1865 and you therefore reap the benefits of experience, besides reference can be given to actual clients in almost every county in the U. S. Pamphlet relating to Patents free upon request.
